NO STRONG DRINK AT ALL.

BUT THEY SAW THE SEA SERPENT JUST THE SAME.

A Thrilling Sunday Adventure by the Captain and Crew of Expressman M. P. Sherman's Yacht—The Sea Serpent Seen in All its Glory, with Two Horns, a Scaly Back and a Tapering Tail.

The sea serpent has come. His serpentship has made his first public appearance of the season in the waters of the North Shrewsbury. The serpent was not conceived in the imaginative mind of an untruthful reporter, but was a reality—a genuine sea serpent with a small head, two horns, a scaly back and all the other requirements of a bona-fide reptile.

Among those who can vouch for the serpent's visit to these waters are Expressman Marcus P. Sherman, Clerk Lloyd Eglinton, Grocer Stephen Allen and ex-Clerk William Tilton, all of Red Bank. They had been down to Highland Beach on Sunday on the invitation of Expressman Sherman, in his yacht Tillie S. They spent a most enjoyable day. Their luncheon consisted of smoked beef, pies and crackers, and cold coffee and water. The mariners started to return home at about ten o'clock in the evening. The moon had risen and her mild rays lit up the placid waters to such an extent that objects many yards away were plainly discernible. A brisk summer breeze was stirring and the yacht cut through the water at a lively rate. Skipper Sherman manned the tiller and Clerk Eglinton was in the lookout tower.

As the Tillie S. approached a point opposite the Neptune club house Lookout Eglinton yelled out:

"Danger ahead!"

"Where away?" called out Skipper Sherman.

"Two points off the lee bow, and we're heading for it," responded the lookout; and a moment later he yelled: "Hard-a-port your helm, or we're all dead men."

Skipper Sherman jammed down the helm and the yacht rounded up. She came up in the wind and then the mariners looked around for the danger to which Lookout Eglinton had alluded. As they stood gazing over the leeward rail a dark object swam lazily in front of the bow of the yacht. It swam with a snake-like motion and was apparently about fifty feet long. About half of its body had passed the craft, when the object, with a mighty roar, raised its head from the water. Its head was small and round and looked something like the head of a bull-dog. There were two short narrow curved horns in its head just above the eyes. Its eyes were about the size of a silver dollar, and its upper lip was ornamented with a growth of bristles like that of a cat. The nose was flat and the nostrils were quite large. The monster's tail tapered to a point and it lashed the water furiously as it resumed its journey towards the shore. The mariners were greatly frightened and a mighty sigh of relief burst from their pent-up breasts when the tapering tail passed the stern of the boat. No sooner had the serpent left the vicinity of the yacht than the frightened mariners started their craft and pointed for home. Lookout Eglinton, despite the prevalence of mud flats and sedges in that locality, could not resist the temptation to look back. He saw the serpent leisurely swim towards the shore and then disappear in Hartshorne's cove.

Other persons who were out sailing near the club house at the time say they saw the serpent and the description they give of it tallies exactly with that given by the crew of the Tillie S.

There was not even "soft stuff" on board the boat, and the sole drinks of the crew during the entire day consisted of either warm water or cold coffee. They had plenty of pie aboard, but none of the party thinks he ate enough to disturb his vision. The next time the Tillie S. makes a trip to the Highlands she will have a serpent-catcher fastened to the bow of the boat, somewhat after the fashion of a cow-catcher on a locomotive.

A METHODIST LAWN PARTY.

The ladies of the Red Bank Methodist church held a lawn party on the church grounds Monday night. ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

Corlies—Ditwiler.

Miss Helen Corlies and Hulbert W. Ditwiler were married on Thursday of last week at Saint Mark's Episcopal church, Washington, D. C. At twelve o'clock Mendelssohn's beautiful wedding march announced the approach of the bridal party. The bride, who was attired in a bridal robe of pure white, with court train and long bridal veil, entered the church upon the arm of her father, who escorted her to the chancel rail, where she was met by the groom, who came from the sacristy. The beautiful marriage ceremony of the church was performed by the rector, Rev. A. F. Steele, in a very solemn and impressive manner. After the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents, where the happy couple received the congratulations of their many friends. The presents were numerous and handsome, among them being a pair of sugar tongs and a dozen tea spoons, a gift from the grandmother of the bride, Mrs. P. W. Corlies, and which had been presented to Mrs. Corlies at her wedding nearly seventy years ago. The wedded couple left on an extended Northern tour, during which they will visit Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Niagara and Cleveland. Upon their return they will reside at Mansfield, Ohio. The bride is the eldest daughter of Jacob Corlies, formerly postmaster at Red Bank, and now a special examiner of the pension office stationed in Ohio. The groom is one of the leading business men of Mansfield, he being a member of the firm of J. Ditwiler & Sons, of the Buckeye suspender company.

Steele—Bruce.

On Tuesday of last week Samuel Bruce, of Oceanic, son of Wm. Bruce, was united in marriage with Mrs. Elizabeth Steele, a young widow who was formerly governess for Mrs. Dominick, a summer resident of Oceanic. The wedding took place at New York and was strictly private. The bride wore a black lace dress trimmed with black moire ribbon, with lace hat to match, which set off her pretty face and graceful figure to advantage. The groom is a thriving young business man of Oceanic. Immediately after the ceremony the couple went to Oceanic, where they have begun housekeeping.

Anna Belleville Haight, daughter of Gen. Chas. Haight, of Freehold, was married yesterday afternoon to Fred H. Hunter, of New York. The marriage was held in St. Peter's church at Freehold, and the Rev. Thomas H. Cullen performed the ceremony. There was a large number of people present from Freehold and other parts of the county, and also from New York. The bride received some very handsome presents. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter are now at Washington, D. C., and will sail for Europe on Saturday, July 6th.

Ada Waters, the only daughter of James W. Waters, of Long Branch, was married to Rossteen Hibbetts, a popular young farmer, last Thursday. The knot was tied by Rev. A RACE AGAINST TIME.

Lem Ketcham's Norwood Mare Trots a Mile in 2:33 3-4.

A trotting race against time took place at Conover's half-mile track at Middletown this morning at eight o'clock. The race was the outcome of a bet made last week between El. Richardson and Richard Applegate that Lem Ketcham's Norwood mare could not trot a mile in 2:40. Mr. Applegate bet $10 that the horse could make the distance in the above time. Other bets of $10 and $20 were also made, and much interest was manifested in the race. About one hundred horsemen from Red Bank and vicinity were on hand this morning when the race came off. Mr. Willis, a prominent race horse man living just the other side of Hubbard's bridge, was the official timer.

The track was rather heavy, owing to the rain last night. The first half mile was made in 1.16½ and the mile was trotted in 2.33¾. The result of the race was a complete surprise, as the time is considered very fast. Had the track been in good condition the distance would have been made in less than 2:30. Lem Ketcham drove the mare.

TWO PARKERTOWN CASES.

A HUSBAND ACTS AS COUNSEL AGAINST HIS WIFE.

Mrs. Catherine Peak Talks to Her Husband About Mrs. Letitia Stout, and Pays $8.60 for It.

Mrs. Letitia Stout, wife of Justice Jesse Stout, of the Highlands, had Mrs. Catherine Peak, of the same place, arrested for using indecent language about her. The case came up before Justice Child, of Red Bank, on Monday afternoon, and was attended by a large number of persons from the Highlands, Parkertown and other towns in that vicinity. Henry M. Nevius represented Mrs. Stout, and Justice Jesse Stout appeared for Mrs. Peak. Mr. Stout does not live with his wife.

Mrs. Stout was the first witness called. She swore that on Sunday night, June 16th, while she was in the vicinity of the Peak house, she heard Mrs. Peak tell her husband that she (Mrs. Stout) was an improper person, and use other language detrimental to the character of the plaintiff. Edward Worth was next sworn, and his testimony corroborated that of Mrs. Stout. During Mrs. Stout's testimony her husband wanted to cross-examine her, but the counsel for Mrs. Stout considered such a course entirely out of place and raised an objection.

Mrs. Peak was sworn for the defence. She testified that she did not use the language she was charged with. She said that she was talking to her husband on the night in question, but had said nothing regarding Mrs. Stout's character. She further said that she saw three persons that night near her front gate, and recognized them as Mrs. Stout and Edward Worth and his wife. Mrs. Matthews, a neighbor of Mrs. Peak, swore that she did not hear Mrs. Peak use the language which had been attributed to her. Charles Parker, Sr., was put on the witness stand, and swore that he was passing the Peak house on the night of the 16th of June about ten o'clock and heard Mr. and Mrs. Peak talking together in their house, but he did not stop and bother himself as to what they were talking about.

Daniel Clevenger, of Parkertown, who was present at the trial, interrupted the witnesses from time to time while they were giving their testimony. After all the testimony was in Justice Stout began to sum up, and tried to show that Mrs. Peak had not used improper language about Mrs. Stout. Mr. Nevius, in summing up his side of the case, explained the law on the subject, which explicitly says that where one or more witnesses testify that improper language is used against another, and that testimony is not impeached, such evidence is enough to convict the defendant. The justice gave a verdict for Mrs. Stout for $1 and costs, amounting in all to $8.60.

After the trial Mr. Clevenger wanted a warrant issued for Mrs. Stout's arrest on a charge of adultery. He gave the justice the names of several persons whom he said would substantiate the charge. Among the names was that of Mr. Stout, but he refused to testify against his wife on the ground that the laws of New Jersey prevented a husband from testifying against his wife. Justice Child has not yet decided whether or not he will issue a warrant on this charge.

Another Parkertown case came up before Justice Child yesterday afternoon, in which Mrs. Nellie Layton was complainant and Lon Hand was defendant. Mrs. Layton had the custody of an eight-year-old daughter of Lewis DeCamp, who is her brother-in-law. About a week ago DeCamp told Hand to take care of the child, and the girl went to Hand's house. Mrs. Layton went after the child, and it was then that the alleged assault was committed. Witnesses testified that Mrs. Layton was dragging the child by the hair when Hand interposed and made the woman loosen her hold. Justice Child dismissed the case.

A PARSON WINS A CASE.

Rev. A. R. Wilson Brings a Suit Against His Sister.

Rev. A. R. Wilson, of Red Bank, brought suit before Justice Edwards, of Eatontown, last week for the recovery of some household goods which he had stored with his sister, Mrs. Amanda Bedell, about two years ago. Mr. Wilson was represented by James Steen, of Eatontown, and Delancey Wilgus was the counsel for Mrs. Bedell. Mr. Wilson testified that he had bought about $20 worth of household goods at the sale of the personal property of his father, Wm. Wilson, and made arrangements with his sister, Mrs. Bedell, to have the goods stored in the rooms of the house she occupies on Railroad avenue. No agreement was made for payment for storage except that when Mr. Wilson wanted the goods he was to have them. About three weeks ago he sent a Red Bank carman for the goods, but Mrs. Bedell refused to let him have them until a bill of $20 for storage had been paid. Mr. Wilson refused to pay the bill, and he brought suit for the possession of the goods or their value.

For the defense it was claimed that the goods had been brought to the house without Mrs. Bedell's consent, she being absent from home when the goods arrived. She admitted that she had used some of the chairs and also a stove.

Theodore Wilson and his sister Elmira were put on the stand and corroborated their brother's testimony.

The justice reserved his decision until Tuesday, when he gave a verdict for Mr. Wilson for $20 and costs, amounting in all to $37, and Mrs. Bedell is to keep the goods.

Jeff Errickson Discharged.

The hearing of Jeff Errickson, who was arrested last week on complaint of Benjamin Leonard for assault and battery at a poker game held on the Middletown shore about two weeks ago, came up before Justice Child last Wednesday afternoon. The testimony offered at the hearing was to the effect that Errickson had not assaulted Leonard, and that the latter had caused his nose to bleed while the men were scuffling. The justice dismissed the complaint.

BASE BALL.

Local Notes About the National Game.

Last Wednesday the Puritans of Little Silver played another game with the West Long Branch club and beat them by a score of 5 to 3. The West Long Branchers had several players from the Cities club to help them along, but they could not overcome the good work of the Puritans. The Puritan club had several new players, and the club is now made up of Charles Walling, captain; George Matthews, Forman Matthews, G. Leddy, H. Leddy, A. Hawkins, H. Curtis, G. Steele and J. Hobrough. The club expects to play another game with the West Long Branch club for $25 a side on Saturday of next week.

The Indians of the Highlands have a game of base ball almost every Sunday with a nine from Navesink, and usually victory perches on the banner of the Indians. Last Sunday's game was rather one-sided, the Indians winning by a big score. Alfred Johnson is captain of the Navesink nine. Next Sunday the Navesinkers expect to do better as they will have a new pitcher in the person of Aleck Johnson.

The game of base ball which was to have taken place at Keyport last Saturday between the Athletics of that place and the Puritans of Red Bank, has been indefinitely postponed. The Puritans did not appear, owing to some of their players being unable to participate in the game.

On the Fourth of July the Puritans of Red Bank will play a game of ball with a picked nine. Wm. Craus, of New York, a frequent summer visitor to Red Bank, will catch for the Puritans, and Al. Chambers will be in the pitcher's box.

Last Wednesday the Cities, of Long Branch, beat the Athletics, of Keyport, by a score of 31 to 11. The game was played at Long Branch, and the return game will be played at Koyport on the Fourth of July.

A Long Branch base ball nine is composed of railroad men, and a week ago they beat the Stars of Asbury Park by a score of 40 to 23.

The Oceanic base ball club is now ready to receive challenges from Red Bank, Fair Haven and Seabright clubs.

The Galas, of North Long Branch, will play a game with the Cities, of Long Branch, this afternoon.

TWO NEW STEAMBOATS.

One Runs to Seabright and Another to Atlantic Highlands.

The new steamer Sandy Hook on the New Jersey Southern railroad line was put on the route to Sandy Hook and Atlantic Highlands suddenly and unexpectedly yesterday. There were many passengers aboard. She is a very large, fine boat and all her appointments are in elegant taste and perfect finish. All the steam and sailing crafts saluted her with whistles and flags on her maiden trip through the waters of the upper and lower bays. She did not make the speed of the Monmouth, owing to her machinery being new, but there was no unpleasant shaking by the engines and propellers, and in time she may show that Sandy Hook is as good as any other part of old Monmouth when it comes to fast steaming.

A new steamboat, the George B. Sandt, has been put on the route between New York and Seabright. Her captain is James M. Gaskill. She leaves New York from pier 22, East river, foot of Beekman street, every morning at nine o'clock, and leaves Seabright on the return trip late in the afternoon. The boat is 115 feet long, 21½ feet beam, and 5½ feet depth of hold. She draws four feet of water when loaded. All kinds of freight and produce will be carried by the boat.

Mrs. Doty Fined $2 and Costs.

NEWS FROM MIDDLETOWN.

CHINESERS MAKE THEIR ANNUAL EXCURSION.

A Big Sale of Lots at Atlantic Highlands—A Lecture by Capt. John Skidmore—Personal Notes.

The annual excursion of the Chinese Sunday-schools of New York and Brooklyn took place on Monday. The steamer Grand Republic, beautifully and tastefully decorated with many-colored flags, brought down five hundred Chinamen and one thousand men, women and children attached to eight different churches in New York and Brooklyn. The Chinamen, in their loose blouses, wide sleeves, white straw hats under which was coiled their braided hair in from one to three foot queues, their canal-boat like shoes, etc., presented a very unusual scene in the beautiful, busy thoroughfares of Atlantic Highlands. Jam Jims was very attentive as a manager; Ah Slang, one of the performers of the band, had a powder keg with leather heads, upon which he pounded with great gusto; Ah Jingle presided at the gong and made a din that suggested a dinner at a second-class country hotel; Ah Shee and Wun Lung assisted in contributing to a discord that sounded like a mix-up of a man setting up a stove-pipe, a chain pump in motion, the bells on the omnibus plugs of Atlantic Highlands, and the filing of a big log saw. There was an accompaniment of firecrackers in the groves, where this oriental band was successful in scaring and driving away all the birds, toads and snakes in that locality to more harmonious quarters. All the restaurants were full; all the liverymen in town had their hands full, their vehicles full, and at the end, their pockets full; and when the lingering shades of a marvelously beautiful June day descended upon fair Atlantic Highlands, some of the local interested lookers-on of the strange spectacle of the day were also full. A short service was held on shore at two o'clock, which included singing, prayer, reading and addresses. Mayor of the Borough Jon Fost could not welcome the excursionists, as he was professionally engaged at the time. The programme of exercises was printed partly in English and the rest in Chinese. Attached to the programme at the picnic was this IMPORTANT NOTICE.

We hope all friends on this excursion will do their best to be in good behaviour, and be peaceful during the day, that the Press may have no cause to speak evil of this party of this occasion.

Several New York policement accompanied the excursion, and on its arrival reported to Chief of Police Pinckney at Atlantic Highlands. They informed him that though their jurisdiction did not extend to New Jersey, he was authorized to call upon them on any emergency to keep the peace. Marshal Pinckney thanked them, and then there was a shaking of hands, and thereafter that part of First avenue looked like an official police rainbow.

The sale of lots at Atlantic Highlands last Wednesday and Thursday brought in over $30,000. The Patterson farm of 39 acres was bought by Dr. E. C. Curtis for $7,000. The Woodward farm of 45 acres was bought by M. L. Dolby for $11,867. Eighty lots were also sold at prices ranging from $101 to $312. Among the purchasers of lots were Samuel T. Hendrickson, Sherman B. Oviatt, J. F. Long, John G. Garretson, J. M. Reid, Holmes W. Murphy, Wm. Baldwin, S. B. Downes, E. C. Curtis, Dr. Boyle, S. T. Champion, Thos. Jennings, Dr. Chadwick, Robert Emery, George Debnam, Dr. J. B. Faulks, Dr. Johns, T. J. Roberts, T. H. Leonard, J. E. Foster, A. C. Oliver, J. E. Lake, W. E. Blackiston and Capt. Letts. The lots brought their full value. It is generally thought that the two farms were bought for the railroad company.

Capt. John Skidmore, who owns a vessel in which he pursues the olamming business, delivered a lecture at the temperance hall at Atlantic Highlands on Saturday night. The admission fee was ten cents, and the proceeds were to purchase a flag for the hall. There were less than one hundred present, chiefly women. The affair opened with some doleful vocal music, Rev. L. B. Edwards read the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, following it with prayer, and then Capt. Skidmore mounted the stage and placed an empty lime barrel in proper position to sustain a kerosene lamp. Two other lamps and a chair completed the stage arrangements. The lecture was decidedly original, discursive and wandering in its character, and the frequent bursts of laughter attested how much the audience enjoyed the treat.

Contractor S. B. Oviatt has completed the grade of the Atlantic Highlands railroad considerably west of Port Monmouth. R. S. Snyder, commissioner, is obtaining the deeds and making settlements for the right of way for Treasurer J. E. Ralph, and has closed all matters to Keansburg. There is a fair prospect of the road being in running order before the first of August.

Mrs. Thomas Morford, of Chicago, who recently returned from Europe, has been spending a few days at Albert Morford's, of Middletown. She will return to Chicago this week and will be accompanied by Miss Minnie B. Morford, who expects to spend the summer there.

Marshal Pinckney is after all the peddlers of every description entering into Atlantic Highlands borough for the three-dollar license fee. The commissioners have decided that H. C. Both needed no license for the reason that he delivered his beer on orders.

The Saturday night boats and trains to Atlantic Highlands carried large numbers of passengers. The Sunday boat brought down more than a hundred and the Monday morning boats took up about five hundred passengers.

The odd sociable given by the Baptist church at Navesink last Friday and Saturday nights was a very agreeable affair and largely attended. Nearly $100 was taken in, and

How to Help the Town.

The people of Red Bank could do much to make the town more popular and better known by a little push and enterprise. Any means by which the great natural attractions of the town could be brought to the attention of the public; any means whereby people are attracted to the place either permanently or temporarily; and any means whereby the outside public could be brought to realize the advantages Red Bank possesses as a home or as a resort, could not help but add to the prosperity of the town.

Red Bank's natural attractions are many, and those places are few which can compare with it in this respect. It is most pleasantly and healthfully situated; the river, with its bathing, boating, yachting, crabbing and fishing, furnishes abundant recreation for those who enjoy water pleasures. The roads in the vicinity of the town are fairly good, and a drive by the sea or over the Rumson road, which is said to be the handsomest driveway in America, or through the romantic scenery of the Navesink Highlands, are all within easy distance.

The great natural advantages which Red Bank possesses would have been a source of unrivalled prosperity to the place had its citizens possessed the vim and snap which characterizes the residents of some of the other towns in the county. The town's roads should be improved, a system of sewers inaugurated, and a more advantageous communication with New York by water secured. These will probably all come in time, but the time should be hastened. Every dollar spent in improving the town, in making it more desirable as a place of residence, in attracting visitors within its limits, will be returned tenfold. Deliberate, persistent and systematic effort on the part of our citizens would work wonders within a short time. A board of trade, or some similar organization, should be formed, whereby a combined effort to benefit the town could be made. Red Bank cannot hold its own unless its citizens bestir themselves; and for the town to fall back or to lose part of the trade which it now holds would entail a distinct loss to every business man and resident of the place.

ASBURY PARK POKER.

They Don't Play for Blood Down There, But Only for Show.

(From the Asbury Park Daily Spray.)

A new departure in the game of draw poker is calculated to create a false impression upon observers. There are lots of men who cannot afford to be high-rollers, but would like to be considered fast and furious players. It is a common thing now for five or six to gather together and play the indoor national game for ten cents ante and $1 limit. This is a pretty stiff game for young fellows, and when it is played for fair and keeps, a player can easily lose $100 at a sitting, but these young men are playing merely for show. They have an understanding with each other and at the close of the game they settle on the bankrupt basis of ten cents on the dollar. While they are playing a stranger who looks on goes away with the impression that he has been looking at a game between real sports, and that they must be wealthy to be able to bet so rashly. One day last week a party of four opened a game at a house not far from Asbury Park. They were playing among themselves and made the ante $1 and the limit $10. Two or three real heavy sports strolled in later and were awe-struck by the magnitude of the play. When they left the boys settled at one cent on the dollar. They gained a reputation as sports cheaply.

TOWN TALK.

The elections in Pennsylvania and Maine last week show that people have sized up the prohibition theory. A vote was taken in Pennsylvania on Tuesday as to whether or not prohibition should be incorporated in the state constitution, and the proposed amendment was defeated by almost 200,000 majority. The high-license law in Pennsylvania has greatly reduced the number of saloons and drinking places in all the large cities, in Philadelphia the reduction amounting to almost two-thirds of the total number. The election in Rhode Island is still more condemnatory of the prohibition policy. A prohibition amendment was added to the constitution three years ago, and since that time the sale of liquor has been practically unrestricted. Rhode Island was a signal proof of the fact that prohibition does not prohibit the sale of liquor, and in deference to a pronounced public demand, the amendment was re-submitted last Thursday. The vote was overwhelming in favor of the repeal. Rhode Island is the ninth state which has rejected prohibition within a short time past. The prospects are that the prohibition craze will soon go the way of the Greenback theory, and give place to reasonable methods of restricting and governing the liquor traffic.

* * *

The people of Monmouth county have been liberal in their donations to the sufferers by the Johnstown floods. In addition to a large number of packages of clothing, etc., the county has contributed nearly three thousand dollars to the Conemaugh valley people. About a third of the total amount was contributed by the people of Red Bank.

* * *

A number of the county papers are printing as a prohibition item a table to show the average number of inhabitants to each hotel or saloon in each township. The table is worthless because the figures are far from correct. For instance, the table gives the population of Ocean township as 13,330, while the last census, that of 1885, gives the population as 7,540. A good many of the other townships are about as far out of the way. The table is about as true, however, as the ordinary figures put forth by prohibitionists.

* * *

I copy in another column an interview with that great and good statesman, George Washington Patterson, of Asbury Park and Ocean Grove, wherein the seaside philosopher and politician tells of what is coming to pass in the political arena next fall. The manner in which the gifted George does up the prospects of Charles D. Hendrickson for the senatorial nomination in 1890 reminds me of that incident in the battle of the Lake Regillers, when, as the poet says,

Full on the neck of Titus
The blade of Aulus came;

and Titus was done up as effectually as Mr. Hendrickson would be if by any chance his name should be presented to the convention.

* * *

But what does George Washington Patterson mean when he speaks of Dr. Wm. F. Patterson as Edward B. Pott's partner, and says that after their record last winter nothing will be heard of them again? Do legislators have "partners" when they get down in Trenton? And what's the matter with their record, anyway? To be sure they did a heap of kicking, and stated that they wouldn't vote to repeal the local option law; but when the time came they voted for its repeal just the same. It's good Democratic doctrine in New Jersey now-a-days that the people shan't govern themselves, and Potts and Patterson stuck right by their party when this question was voted on, so they are all right on the record and perfectly sound on the party principles. I don't think myself that Potts will get the Democratic nomination for senator, but its pretty tough on Dr. Patterson to read him out of the party. Besides, if the Democrats bounce him out of their party what's to become of him? The Republicans won't have him, that's certain, for they've got no use for a man of his sort. He might join the prohibitionists. They helped elect him last year, and no doubt Patterson and the prohibitionists would both feel quite at home if they formed a permanent combination.

* * *

Will Throckmorton, of Freehold, is the coming man, according to George W. There wasn't any flies on Mr. Throckmorton when he served in the assembly, and if he should get elected senator he would no doubt make as reputable an official. But the general opinion by well-informed people is that the senatorial lightning will strike either Thomas S. R. Brown, of Raritan, or George Washington Patterson, of Neptune, albeit the latter says he isn't in the race.

* * *

The most noticeable part of the whole interview, however, is that in which he states that the Blodgett wing of the Democracy has buried the hatchet, and that that faction is solid for Leon Abbett for governor. It is certain that this faction did all it could to help Abbett get the United States senatorship, and if it is really true that they propose to aid him in his fight for governor it will make the Republicans hump themselves to carry the state. But George is somewhat off when he talks about the majority Abbett will get in Monmouth county.

* * *

While older boys are playing poker, the younger member of the community indulge in the highly exciting game known as "craps." A few days ago there was quite a party of boys down under J. Trafford Allen's sheds playing this game when Constable Daniel Champlain went down that way. The constable wasn't looking for boys who were playing craps, but the boys were looking for the constable, and when they caught sight of him they fled in all directions. An amateur photographer who happened to be in the neighborhood took an instantaneous picture of the group just as they were in the act of scattering, and the picture is said to be an uncommonly good one.

* * *

Poker playing is attended with dangers besides that of losing one's money. Barber Joseph Woods, who was one of the members of a poker party which held a session up-town two or three weeks ago, will lose the sight of one of his eyes as the result of a scuffle which occurred while the game was in progress and there is danger that he will lose the sight of both eyes. Poker playing is a great game, but it is probable that its devotees sometimes find that it doesn't pay to play it.

TERRORIZING THE PRESS.

A Letter on the County Officials of Monmouth.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE REGISTER:

For your encouragement let me say that the taxpayers of the county are watching with increased interest the legal battle in which you are engaged with the county officials in the courts. While the action thus far has seemingly been adverse to you, permit me to assure you that it has made the downfall of a corrupt oligarchy in the county absolutely certain. It is too late in the century to muzzle the press. In your efforts as a journalist to serve the public interests, you have struck blows at a combination that have brought upon you the machinery intended to administer justice, but which is now employed to terrorize the press. The people are and will be with you to the end.

I took up my pen, however, to warn you against a scheme, evidently planned at the court house, to try your case, as it were, behind a barn. It has been beautifully cooked up by the combine, so that the play of "Hamlet" will go on, with Hamlet left out. I refer, of course, to the ingenious suit of the board of freeholders vs. John P. Applegate. The board, after not a little backing and filling, finally arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Applegate had $30 that belonged to the county. And let me here interject once for all that when I use the word board, I mean the majority of the board, and scarcely that; for I believe that some of that majority are honest and misled. They are surrounded by influences practiced in all the arts of getting moneys out of the public treasury. To resume: the board, instead of saying to Auditor Applegate, "Mr. Applegate, the counsel of the board, and the board, have unanimously decided that you have obtained $30 illegally from the treasury; you must restore it, or we will elect some one in your stead. The money being returned, you can then bring suit for your services and recover whatever they are worth." It is safe to predict that the auditor would never have sued the county for his valuable services in deceiving the board of freeholders by his report that there was nothing due the county from the county clerk for license fees. It was ungrateful of the clerk, right on the heels of this report, to march up and pay moneys his nephew had declared were not owing! Still that was the case. But what have we in the place of this obvious action? First the Democratic members of the board meet in caucus and on the face of their own declaration that he (Applegate) had money in his pocket that was not his but the county's, they re-elect him; the Republican members of the board had the decency and consistency to vote against him by voting for another. Here is a fine illustration of what is misnamed non-partisan legislation. Its proper designation is fraudulent legislation. The theory is that the collector of the county and the auditor shall be of the different parties so as to be a check on each other. The result is the dominant party selects both and one is sure to be a scaly member of his party. Here the Democrats chose Auditor Applegate against the protest of his own party, and yet he is to be counted a Republican representative and their watchdog of the treasury, when both Republicans and Democrats have declared by their actions that he wants watching.

The next step in the programme was to have the board direct a prosecution. The papers say the board has retained two eminent lawyers to collect $30. Would it not be much better to the taxpayers to let the miserable $30 go, with other little pickings, then to sacrifice five or six times as much to get it, if they ever do? Is there one man in the board who would individually enter into a litigation that promised such a result? These questions answer themselves. But here comes the little joker. The board has by resolution, authorized the institution of suit to recover the $30. It is to be presumed that the freeholder who introduced the resolution intended that the ordinary course of proceedings should be taken, which would be in the justice's court—that has jurisdiction of the sum in controversy—and was triable in a couple of weeks before a jury of the county. This was a quick and inexpensive way to try the question, but it did not suit the purposes of those that fashion county matters. I see by the Inquirer that the auditor and the board of freeholders through their attorney get together, and with whereases not a few they reach the conclusion that the proper way to do this business is to take the matter into the highest court and try it before Judge Scudder, as it is a question, they say, of law only.

The case is to be conducted in the most amiable manner; service acknowledged, pleadings filed instanter, costs of the higher court to be paid, jurisdiction even to be given to the court, jury waived, etc., etc. The lion and the lamb lie down together, and no fellow can tell which is lion and which is lamb. I will not be surprised if the conclusion is reached that both are lambs, and very young lambs, too.

There are legal objections to this benevolent scheme. It is rather out of the power of individuals to change the jurisdiction of the court. The legislature has heretofore had charge of this matter and it will probably continue to retain control of it. It is not dignified to bring Judge Scudder down from Trenton to invade the justices' jurisdiction in trying cases when $30 is involved. If in this case, why not in others where there is a great deal of principle and only one dollar involved? If they can reduce the supreme court judge to a $30 jurisdiction, why not elevate by a kindred agreement the justices of the pence to $3,000? Then, too, they stipulate for a very speedy trial. What's the hurry? If the county cannot get along without $30, let them get Dr. Patterson to make a payment of that sum on account of the interest on the money he held for nearly or quite five years.

Most of all they want the case tried without a jury—the dearest right of an American citizen. The pretext for this is that it is a strictly legal question whether the auditor has a right to charge for what he calls extra services. If it be granted that the court should decide that he would be entitled to compensation for extra services ordered, the question of a fact would still remain to be decided by a jury whether the services in this case had any value, and if in this case whether they were not harmful and fraudulent.

If a judgment is obtained in favor of Mr. Applegate before a circuit judge in advance of your trial, it would naturally prejudge your case, albeit you are not a party to the suit and could take no part in it, even to make a suggestion or to the mode of trial. The idea that this advantage is sought is strengthened by the fact that your case was postponed until October because of the pending suit, which was to be tried in July, I believe. I do not impute anything to the courts in the premises but the utmost good faith. In fact, my faith is in the courts, who will never lend themselves to any contrivance whereby fair play is sacrificed. You have a right to a full and fair trial, without a side show. If you go to jail, go straight—a martyr to the liberty of the press and a sacrifice to the public interests—is the advice of one who signs himself

ASBURY PARK'S STATESMAN.

He Puts on a New Suit of Clothes and Talks Politics.

(From the Asbury Park Daily Spray.)

"Well, George, how is the political situation in Monmouth county now? I suppose you are busy laying your pipes for the fall campaign?"

George Washington Patterson, of statewide reputation, was thus addressed by a Spray representative last evening on the boardwalk. George appeared to be in the best possible trim for an interview. He wore an elegant suit of clothes of the latest fashion and his bronzed face, sparkling eyes and fine physique gave ample proof that he is in the finest health. George never looked better in his life, and one would take him to be a man of only about forty summers instead of a veteran of many political battle fields.

"Leon Abbett will be the next governor of New Jersey and the Democrats will carry the legislature," replied George. "McPherson and all his cohorts will be vanquished in their efforts to defeat Abbett out of the nomination. Abbett will receive the hearty support of Senator Blodgett and I will work day and night for him."

"How about Senator Nevius? His friends claim he can beat Abbett for governor and carry Monmouth county against him."

"Pshaw! Monmouth county would snow Nevius under by 2,500 majority. There is no Republican living who can defeat Abbett for governor."

"Have you heard of the candidacy of Charles D. Hendrickson for state senator next fall, George?"

"Yes, Mr. Hendrickson has so informed me himself, but he does not stand the ghost of a chance for the nomination. Assemblyman Potts also told me he, too, was a candidate."

"You know Mr. Potts, then, George?"

"Know him! Well, I should think I did, after his record of last winter. Potts's career is a back number, though. He will never be heard of again. Neither will his partner, Patterson.

"Are you a candidate for senator, yourself?"

"No, I am not. I'll tell you who will be our next senator. Will Throckmorton, of Freehold, is the man and he will reflect credit on Monmouth county."

"Are you a candidate for the assembly this fall?"

"I don't know yet. Politics do not pay me. But if my friends desire to honor me, of course I will accede to their wishes."

"Would you favor Al. McCabe for the assembly?"

"Al. is a good fellow and a true Democrat. If he is nominated I will do all I can for him."

"The political pot will soon begin to boil, George. Are you ready for the fray?"

"I am always ready to help the good cause of Democracy. We will sweep the state this fall. Our side has buried the hatchet and we will join in and give Leon Abbett the largest majority ever given for governor in New Jersey."

State Prison Correspondence.

There are few establishments in Trenton that have such extensive correspondence as the state prison. The letters sent out by the prisoners average about eight hundred a month, while the number received average about four times this number. Each convict is allowed by the regulations to send one letter a month, and nearly all avail themselves of the privilege. A considerable number, however, are sent in addition, by special permission. Each prisoner is allowed to receive one letter a week, or even more, as the regulation is not very rigorously enforced, considerable latitude being allowed in this particular.

As every letter sent and received has to be first read by a prison official, this duty imposes a pretty severe task upon the reader. A large percentage of the letters are written in foreign languages, which imposes a still more difficult task upon the official who performs this duty. German, Italian and French constitute the bulk of the foreign languages employed, and these are read by A. Judson Rue, who specially fitted himself for the task by years of arduous study. He is now such a master of these languages that he can readily read any manuscript in them, and he is accordingly one of the most valuable officials of the institution.

Not Altogether In Vain.

"Do you not know, Uncle Jason," said a gentleman to a darkey, "that you are trampling under foot as a worthless thing the sacred right of suffrage?"

"No, sah," replied Uncle Jason; "it am not wufless. I got two dollahs for it."

An Excellent Reason.

Commissioner P. Hall Packer Resigns from Three Offices.

At a meeting of the borough commissioners on Monday night, Commissioner P. Hall Packer tendered his resignation as president of the board of health, also as secretary of the board of commissioners, and to the great surprise of the members he also tendered his resignation as a member of the board. On motion of Commissioner R. P. Blair the resignations were accepted. George B. Sandt and M. Garland were nominated to fill Mr. Packer's place. A ballot was taken which resulted in the election of M. Garland. James J. Reed was elected secretary. At the close of the meeting Ex-Commissioner P. Hall Packer made a little speech thanking the board and the citizens for electing him, and stating his reasons for resigning. The meeting closed with the best of feeling prevailing.

Among the most distinguished guests to arrive at Seabright last week was Hon. Levi P. Morton and family. They will spend part of the summer here and at their Hudson river home. They were delighted with our beautiful roads and enjoyed a drive behind the elegant team of iron-grays of Mrs. Morton's brother-in-law, W. A. Street, whose guests they are. It is expected that President Harrison will spend a week at this place in August.

The engineer's convention, that there has been so much talk about, assembled at the Octagon house on Thursday last. It had been reported that between two and three hundred would attend, but only about one hundred put in an appearance.

The great number of people who have gone to Europe causes many cottages to remain vacant this summer all along our seashore.

The summer schedule of trains on the New York and Long Branch railroad will go into effect next Monday. The new time-table will be found on our last page. Under the list of trains for Newark and Elizabeth, the time-table gives the time when one of the morning trains leaves Red Bank at 8:25, instead of 8:15. There are a large number of trains put on, and people can go to and from New York at almost every hour of the day.

A Complaint Against James Shay.

The case of the state vs. James Shay, Jr., of Cartonville, near Oceanic, will be tried before Justice Child this afternoon at four o'clock. WON AT LAST;

Or, the Legend of Sandystown.

CHAPTER I.

"And now, Gertrude, I must bid you farewell; the tears well to my eyes at the thought, but alas! it must be done."

"And to leave me to mourn forever, Henri?"

"That's about the size of it. When I asked your stern parent for your hand he spurned me as though I were a worm. But let him beware! The day will come when I'll be in the spurning business myself."

As he spoke, Henri Wintergreen's eyes were ablaze with anger.

Although but a poor bricklayer, he had loved Gertrude Frances Pedigree as intensely as though he had drawn a great salary in a large wholesale house.

His love was reciprocated.

The beautiful girl admired his manly form, his generous disposition and strict integrity.

She had consented to marry him if her father made no kick, and Henri had bravely asked the parent for his blessing, but the wealthy banker haughtily replied that his daughter should never marry a bricklayer so long as the court knew herself, and the despondent lover could only say a few sad words of farewell to the beautiful girl and depart forever.

The words were soon spoken, and Henri went away into the darkness, while the heartbroken girl fled to her own room, threw herself upon the couch and wept with a bitterness which the author hopes, gentle reader, you may never know.

This is indeed a bleak, barren world.

CHAPTER II.

Sandystown, the important commercial city in which our story opened, was rivalled by Squawkersville, seven miles distant.

An intense animosity existed between the two places, which grew into a positive hatred as the years rolled on.

When the great Western syndicate erected a two-story hotel at Sandystown, the Phœnix Occidental syndicate erected a three-story hotel at Squawkersville. The newspapers of the two trade centers were continually quarreling in a most disreputable way, and violence frequently occurred.

One morning, four years after the events narrated in the previous chapter, Mr. Pedigree, the banker, was striding to and fro in his office very excitedly. His brow wore an ominous frown, while his eyes had in them the light of fury. As he walked he spoke angrily to a tall, handsome man who stood quietly by, in the following strain:

"There's no use talking, Mr. Bulletin, something must be done. If you can't strengthen the Sandystown nine, the Squawkersville outfit will wipe us clean out of the field. They've won four straight games already, and to-day's game is the last of the series."

"I have told you," replied Mr. Bulletin, who was manager of the local base ball club, "that I have signed a phenomenal pitcher from the East, and he is liable to be here any moment. Until he comes I must keep Jimalong in the box. Will you be at the grounds to-day?"

"Yes. I want to see at least one game captured from the general ruin. I haven't put all my earthly possessions in this club for fun."

The manager departed, and a few moments later a tall, swarthy young man entered the banker's office and was coolly received.

CHAPTER III.

"Mr. Pedigree," said the newcomer, "when I signed as pitcher for your club you promised me the hand of your daughter, Miss Gertrude."

"Oh, did I, eh?" replied the banker, with the most withering sarcasm; "and prithee, what have you done to have such a reward? The Squawkersville pitcher has walked all around you and made the whole town dizzy. I'd rather see my daughter marry a one-eyed hired man than to tie up with a pitcher who can't hit a church."

"Well, you promised her for my bride, and forsooth, if you don't keep your word I'm going to sail into you and pound about three bales of hay out of you."

"What, knave! You threaten?"

"That's what I do."

For a moment the men glared at each other, but the banker finally grew nervous, and in a voice that faltered somewhat, said:

"Mr. Jimalong, let us be calm and dispassioned. You will be in the box again to-day, and if you win the game for Sandystown, you can marry my daughter before sunset."

The young man deliberated for a time, and then replied calmly: "That will do."

When he reached the door he turned, and pointing a threatening finger at the banker cried: "But mind you, no monkey business goes."

CHAPTER IV.

Little did the haughty banker know that the above conversation had been heard by his daughter, but so it was.

She had come down to the bank to work him for some stuff, and hearing a conversation in his office, applied her ear to the keyhole and became acquainted with the cruel compact which had been made.

The wretched young female sped to the house with tears streaming down her face.

She abhorred Jimalong.

He was not her kind of people.

He had a squint in his left eye and smoked bad cigars.

"Sooner than splice with him," she murmured, as she flew along, "I will renounce the world and move to St. Louis."

Reaching her room, she gathered a few of her treasures in four trunks, had them sent to the depot and went down to take the train.

CHAPTER V.

There were fully 3,000 spectators at the park when the base ball game opened.

Many of them were from Squawkersville, and their howls of derision when Jimalong took his place in the box could have been heard quite a distance.

Squawkersville had won four straight games, and to win another would forever humiliate Sandystown.

Jimalong was pale but determined. He knew that a life's happiness was at stake, and he intended to govern himself accordingly.

* * * * * *

Four innings had been played, and the banker was speechless with rage and mortification, as were many of the best citizens of the town.

The score at this stage of the game stood:

Squawkersville	8	2	5	1	1	1	1	1	1

The Squawkersville sluggers had pounded Jimalong all over the field, and the ribald jests of the visitors from their town could be heard on every hand.

Mr. Pedigree was on the point of fainting, when a wild, glad shout went up from the throats of 2,005 Sandystown people.

"He comes! he comes! The phenomenon!"

He had indeed arrived. A man of magnificent form and commanding presence stepped lightly into the diamond, took Jimalong's place, and——

But why describe the wonderful work he performed?

Before he had pitched for five minutes he had the visitors so badly rattled that they pounded their heads against the fence.

His curves are spoken of to this day.

When the last inning had been played the score was 22 to 11 in favor of Sandystown.

Quivering with emotion, the banker stepped down from the grand stand and sought to honor the man who had won the game.

But the phenomenon turned upon him fiercely and thundered:

"None of your taffy, you old giraffe. I am Henri Wintergreen, whom you spurned! Avaunt!"

Then the heroic young man went to the depot, where Gertrude was waiting for him, he having met her when he came in on the train. The happy couple went to the next town, were married, and went on a tour of Europe, where Henri was knighted and given a baronial king, to whom he taught the art of pitching a curved ball.

EPILOGUE.

Our story is nearly ended. Crushed and mortified by the failure of his atrocious machinations, the banker lost his reason, and is now confined in a private madhouse, where he persists in calling the superintendent an umpire, and amuses himself by loping around his cell under the idea that he is making home runs.

He is indeed a pitiable object.

Jimalong led a miserable life for a few months, when he was given a situation as an umpire, and was lynched by an infuriated populace.

Mr. Bulletin, being unable to produce the phenomenon at the next game, was sent to the Dry Tortugas, and is subsisting on roots and barks in those melancholy wilds.

Thus we see, reader, that virtue is always triumphant in the end.

The evil man may flourish for a while, but retribution will finally camp on his neck and make him tired.

TALK ABOUT SLOW TRAINS.

A Touching Incident on the Old Colony Railroad in Massachusetts.

"I want to go to bed, so give me a room as soon as you can. I ought to have reached the city early this afternoon, and here it is eleven o'clock," said a man who entered the Girard hotel in Philadelphia.

"What made you so late?" asked a Girard house clerk, as he threw down a key to which was attached a rough-edged brass tag about the size of a buckwheat cake.

"Oh, slow trains! Slow trains! They seemed to stop everywhere and at all the little cross roads."

"That's queer."

"I should say it was. Why, at one place they stopped about seven minutes, while half a dozen people came out of the only house to be seen in the neighborhood and boarded the train. Did you ever hear anything like it?"

"Never."

"I have," said a little old man with long, shaggy hair, who had overheard the conversation while searching the Philadelphia directory for the name of a Boston firm.

"You have?"

"Yes; you may not believe it; but it's a fact. Some years ago I used to travel a great deal on the Old Colony railroad, up in Massachusetts. There was a place called Wheat Sheaf Lane, where the train stopped nearly every day for an old woman, who was always there to send some eggs into town. Now, would you believe it? One day the train stopped as usual for Aunt Betsy, who was there with her eggs, but she only had eleven. She said that an old hen was still on the nest, and she wanted the train to wait until she could make up the dozen."

"Yes."

"Well, I'll be darned if that train didn't wait while the hen laid the extra egg."

The late arrival said he guessed he would go to bed, the bediamoned hotel clerk swooned, and the little old man walked down the corridor and dropped wearily into a chair.

Avoid

Tenement

House

Cigars!

The season is now beginning when certain diseases are apt to obtain a footing in the human system. When once the germs of these diseases are established in the body, any irregularity of diet or any unusual exposure is likely to bring on a protracted costly spell of sickness. Among the diseases which are most readily caused by taking impurities into the human system are diphtheria and typhoid fever.

More recently physicians have come to the conclusion that there are other means of catching these filth diseases than through impure food and water; and among these sources of contamination are tenement-house cigars. Millions upon millions of these cigars are made annually by persons who live in tenement-houses, where the entire family often live in one room, and where all, from the youngest to the oldest, work at making cigars. If one could see the places where many of these cigars are made, he would never again smoke another cigar unless he knew its pedigree, so to speak; and it is certain that he would never again, if he knew it, smoke a tenement-house cigar, made amidst such dirt, disorder and disease.

It is not necessary, however, to give up smoking through fear of acquiring some disease. There are cigar manufacturers who keep their places clean and neat, who employ only skilful workmen, and whose cigars can always be relied on to be free from any germs of disease. Such a cigar manufacturing firm is that of John Cullington & Sons. They have been in business in Red Bank for a great many years, and their cigars have acquired more than a local reputation. All their cigars are made from selected tobacco, and are made up on their own premises. The most popular brand is the Deborah, of which more are sold than of all their other varieties combined. All of their brands, however, are made with the same care as the Deborah. The result is that their cigars have become famous in this locality, and they are justly popular with those who enjoy a good, evenly-drawing cigar, that can be smoked with a clear conscience and with the fullest confidence that no germs of disease are being drawn into the system at every puff.

We also keep a full line of Edouardo H. Cato's celebrated Key West cigars, and a great variety of pipes, chewing tobacco and other smokers' goods.

It is suggested by the rise of the thermometer that THINNER CLOTHING is in order. We have it—lots of it—and at prices that make most dealers shiver, though the weather is hot. For instance, who ever heard of a Coat full lined, trousers half lined, and two sets of buttons for coat and vest, in case the purchaser should wish to use it for a G. A. R. Suit. We have it and others in satinets and cottonades at the same price.

Most dealers don't keep Middlesex, but sell you something better (?) for less money (?). Don't you know? Sandalphon.

Have you read in the Talmud of old,
In the Legends the Rabbins have told
Of the limitless realms of the air,
Have you read it—the marvellous story
Of Sandalphon, the Angel of Glory,
Sandalphon, the Angel of Prayer?

How, erect, at the outermost gates
Of the City Celestial he waits,
While his songs, like the ladder of light,
That rose in the vision of Jacob,
Rise upward with angels unnumbered,
By Jacob was seen, as he slumbered
Alone in the desert at night?

The Angels of Wind and of Fire
Chant only one hymn, and expire
With the song's irresistible stress;
Expire in their rapture and wonder,
As harp-strings are broken asunder
By music they throb to express.

But serene in the rapturous throng,
Unmoved by the rush of the song,
With eyes unimpassioned and slow,
Among the dead angels, the deathless
Sandalphon stands listening breathless
To sounds that ascend from below;—

From the spirits on earth that adore,
From souls that entreat and implore
In the fervor and passion of prayer;
From the hearts that are broken with losses,
And weary with dragging the crosses
Too heavy for mortals to bear.

And he gathers the prayers as he stands,
And they change into flowers in his hands,
Into garlands of purple and red;
And beneath the great arch of the portal,
Through the streets of the City Immortal
Is wafted the fragrance they shed.

It is but a legend, I know—
A fable, a phantom, a show,
Of the ancient Rabbinical lore;
Yet the old mediæval tradition,
The beautiful, strange superstition,
But haunts me and holds me the more.

When I look from my window at night,
And the welkin above is all white,
All throbbing and panting with stars,
Among them majestic is standing
Sandalphon the angel, expanding
His pinions in nebulous bars.

And the legend, I feel, is a part
Of the hunger and thirst of the heart,
The frenzy and fire of the brain,
That grasps at the fruitage forbidden,
The golden pomegranates of Eden,
To quiet its fever and pain.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS.

On the sandy beach of Sea Girt, a little apart from the crowd, sat a woman, alone and thoughtful.

A book lay on her lap, but its pages fluttered back and forth unheeded.

She was young—not more than twenty-five—and prepossessing.

Those who passed turned to look again at the graceful form in white-bordered serge and the brilliant face beneath the veiled hat.

A brilliant face, yet a sad one now, with that pathetic droop to the ruby lips, and that haunting expression in the dark-blue eyes.

Of what was Erma Valsor thinking as she sat there in the sunlight with the sound of merry words and laughter ringing in her ears, and the waves of the Atlantic splashing almost at her feet?

Not of the present, but the past; of a summer that was to her the sweetest saddest memory of her life; of an afternoon like this—warm and bright—when she had made the decision that in after years had cost her pangs of anguish and bitter tears.

The sparkling waves, the white sand, the shifting crowd all faded from view, and she saw instead a shadowy glade, a broken stile, and two figures—one a young man with an earnest face and tender, dark eyes; the other a girl with drooping head.

She saw him take his companion's hand, and while his features glowed with feeling, heard him tell of his love and his hopes for the future; saw the girl's face flush, and then pale as her lips parted, and reluctantly yet firmly the words came:

"Barton, it cannot be! I love you, but all my life I have longed for wealth and power. This plain life here would be distasteful to me. I would be discontented, and we would both be miserable. It is best that we part."

Oh! she remembered them well, those selfish, cruel words; yet it had seemed to her then that she had acted wisely.

It was a struggle between love and reason, and the latter conquered. Yet to-day, after seven years, she sat there possessed of the wealth and power she had coveted—a miserable woman.

With an effort she roused herself and picked up the book that had fallen unawares to her feet. Some distance away a golden-haired boy was at play, and Erma's gaze softened as it rested upon him.

She moved toward him, and at that instant a man, who was strolling along the sands, stopped and spoke to the child. Erma, busy with the adjustment of her veil, scarcely noticed him, but moved slowly on.

"Come, Lewis," she said, "we must go back."

Then with a start the man faced her; a quick uplifting of her eyes, an indrawn breath, a quiver of the lips, and Erma Valsor stood like one turned to stone.

Scarcely less immovable was he who stood opposite; and then a change came upon the dark face; it seemed to harden and grow cold.

"Is he your child?" he said in low, set tones.

"Yes," breathed Erma; and then the color came back to her cheeks, and she broke the bonds that held her. "It is strange that we should meet. I was just thinking of you."

"I am flattered," he replied. "Yet I would suggest that the wealthy Mrs. Valsor spend her leisure moments more advantageously and agreeably."

She shrank beneath the cold scorn of his tones, and looking half timidly into his eyes saw only the light of haughty disdain there. He had not forgiven her. Yet she was loath to let him go like this.

"Are—are you at the old place now?" she queried.

"I have gone there for a visit."

"Is it much changed? I have thought of driving over there some day."

"You will find it about the same—that has changed little. If I am there I shall be pleased to show you—"

"Oh, I would not come now," said Erma, quickly. "I thought it was untenanted—deserted."

How nervous and confused she was—she, whose ready wit and tact were never known to fail her.

She regretted her last words, when Barton Dawn, with a haughty bow, said:

"I am sorry my presence there will deter you from gratifying your curiosity. Still, if you choose to come, I will keep myself in seclusion."

He turned away, and Erma, with tears in her eyes, reached out and drew little Lewis to her.

"You misunderstand me," were the words upon her lips.

But she checked them, for had he not sufficiently humiliated her.

And so, with her child's hand in hers, she walked across the sands, and when Barton Dawn, after a few steps, turned to look back, he saw only the gleam of golden curls and the flutter of a white veil.

"And so we meet after seven years," he thought, moodily. "Time has dealt lightly with her; but she is one of those women upon whom sorrows make light impress—fair and fickle. Our parting—her husband's death, both alike are forgotten. I am the only one who must remember. And she talks of coming to the old place; how could I bear to see her there, where in every nick and corner her image has haunted me? Yet, perhaps, it would break the spell. I think of Erma, the girl I loved—if Guy Valsor's widow, the woman of the world same. I might realize the difference and my own folly.

Yet the days passed, and Erma Valsor did not come to the cottage, and Barton, recalling their meeting on the beach, wished he had been kinder to her.

They might never meet again, and she would remember his harsh, scornful words.

But one day a message came, and the man's heart beat faster as he read it.

"BARTON—I am in trouble—Lewis, my darling is ill—I need a friend—a true friend. Will you come to me?

ERMA."

He could not refuse then, and mounting his horse he went with all haste to the hotel where he would find her.

She came to greet him looking like a shadow of her former self, her face was as white as the robe she wore, her eyes underlined with dark circles that told of sleepless nights and anxiety.

"You sent for me, and I came," he said.

"I knew you would, even though you despise me," she answered. "Oh, Barton Dawn, give me your sympathy. I am alone in the world, alone—he—Lewis is—dead!"

"Dead!"

He repeated the word mechanically, and then pity for the woman before him overcame every other feeling.

"My poor Erma," he said, gently, and then sprung forward to catch her drooping form, as, with a moan of anguish, she fell like a broken lily.

When the white lids raised again, and he looked into her eyes, he was startled by the expression; he saw there a dazed, vacant look that gave no sign of recognition as it met his gaze.

"I wish Barton would come," she murmured, looking slowly round her. He is the only true friend I ever had."

"Erma!" he cried fearfully; but she waved him from her and walked to and fro, wringing her white hands.

"Lewis, my darling, come back," she went on; "if I lose you I shall be alone, all alone. He will not come to me—he scorns me—oh, take these jewels away, they are the price of my happiness. Barton, forgive me, you will forgive when you know how I have suffered."

Then for an instant, as she paused before him, she seemed to realize who he was and what had occurred.

"Barton, do not leave me!" she cried, as she flung out both hands toward him, and for the second time consciousness forsook her.

A long illness followed, during which Erma Valsor raved constantly of the past.

When she awoke to sensibility once more, she was lying in a shadowy room, with a kind, familiar face bending above her.

It was the face of Barton Dawn's mother, and she was back in the little cottage room, where, seven years ago, she had spent many happy hours.

She was little Erma Taylor then, the daughter of an old schoolmate, who had come to find rest and recreation away from the dusty city; now she was the wealthy Mrs. Valsor, and her wealth was the price of Barton's peace; but the elder woman felt no resentment as she bent above the wan face on the pillow.

"Mrs. Dawn, how came I here—and you, too?" murmured Erma.

"Barton sent for me. The hotel was no place for you."

"Oh, I remember—Lewis—"

She began to weep, and Mrs. Dawn went out and left her alone.

A half hour later Barton came in, and when, after a talk, Erma fell into a deep restful slumber, her hand was clasped in his, and there was a smile on her lips.

Of course the sequel is easily surmised.

There, where they had met and loved—those two—they found reconciliation and reunion.

It was three years ere Erma went out into the world again, and then the niche in her heart, left vacant by the death of little Lewis, was filled by the presence of a baby girl, with the golden curls of her lost darling, and the deep, tender eyes of Barton Dawn.
